Coach Woodruff Criticised for Clinging to the Formation When Straight Football With Interference Seems More Iffective-Sanford Goes to New Haven - Other News.

Since the game with Harvard, Coach Woodruff of the Pennsylvania eleven has been rather severely criticised by football experts because of the persistency with which he has clung to the "guards back" play, to the exclusion of nearly all other methods of attack. When Harvard beat Pennsylvania by 10 to 0, in 1898, t was the consensus of opinion then that the "guards back" play was a failure, but there was much indignation among Pennsylvania followmuch indignation among Pennsylvania followers because of this assertion. Woodruff was among those who remained loyal to the play and when Harvard broke it to pieces again last Saturiae, he refused to admit its failure. While there can be no dount that the "guards back" play can be made effective against ordinary elevens it we follower to be inadvisable to restrict P. Thatla's methods of altack to this portion of the grant of the second of the sec their freak exhibition. de to play a successful lige jast week. But when illed and the men ground gainers, were practically helpless, the whole eleven became demoralized because no other plan of attack could be resorted to. Woodruff has maintained all along that the "guards back" formation can produce at least forty variations, but as long as it can be stopped by Harvard's tactics it appears to be useless. Many tricks of this kind have been tried in football. Harvard at one time was a stickler for intricate formations, such as the Deland flying wedge and other schemes, but these ideas were forced into the background for ideas were forced into the background for eimpler ones. Harvard and Yale have been more successful than the other big elevens this year and yet they have followed the game on time-honored lines. Interference has been the big factor at both universities, particularly at Harvard, where this style of play has been made almost perfect. Harvard's back field has not been handicapped by intricate formations and puzzling signals, but the men have been instructed in team pluy so that they have it down tine. The secret of interference has been solved at Cambridge and it has been worked upon until improvement is hardly possible except as to men or details. End rins are, therefore, regarded as more profitable than line bucklar, except when only a ward or two are needed at critical points. When a player receives the ball for a run, the fundamental principle in football has always been to protect him from tackles, for the longer he remains protected the more distance he can gain. That is where plain, everyday interference comes in and Harvard is playing this style of gains to the limit. So perfect was Harvard's interference when Sawin made his first touchdown against Pennsylvania that the runner covered twenty-five varia before reaching the goal line and was not once touched by a Pennsylvania tackler, all of whom found flying Harvard men between them and the man with the ball. Another instance i introduced with the ball, and not a Qualor could get a hand on him until forty yards had been made. Another interesting point was the vigor of Harvard's interferers. They went into opponents with such force that there were many spills. Yet no Harvard's non violated the rules by using his fiste or adopting tactics bordering upon a foul. Yale has been playing shell and comel have also been successful with the use of this kind of interference, though Columbia has been using a new hurdle play with good results. But Pennsylvania all this time has stuck to the "guards back" and has not yet decided in give it up. Cornell, coached by Haughter and Lewis, both ex-flaryard men, will adopt the Crimson's methods of stopping Woodrad's pet play on Thanksiding of the firm when the play with the time of the play with good results. made almost perfect. Harvard's back field has not been handicapped by intricate for an-

Cornell, coached by Haughtor and Lewis, hex-Harward men, will adopt the Crimson's thods of stopping Woodrun's pet play on ank-giving Day, and if the Itherans meet it cossfully, it is more than probable that in they year the Qualkers wings the Shomtelves nore than one method of advancing the ball. Coach Sanford of Columbia went to New Haven yesterday. He did not state his misdou, but its believed he will be asked to coach he Yale centre man for a few days. Last car when Sanford was asked to help the coaches at New Haven he becam by making most radical change. He teek Cunks, the dant Hawaiian, out of the centre and subtituted Perry Hale, who had been playing it tackle. Sanford in less than one week leveloped Hale and made the Yale rush line lowerful where it had been weak all the fall of Sanford takes hold again this time it is juste possible that he will recommend the emoval of big Sheldon, the weight thrower, from right guard, and the substitution of the through the last two weeks.

Yale will insist on thirty-minute haives in the game with the Carlisle Indians at New Haven to-morrow. As the red men are noted for their endurance, Yale may find that her hands are quite full because of this point. If Hale is unable to play on the New Haven eleven there may be trouble, as he is almost the only back capable of making an impression on the Indians' solid rush line. The Yale coaches believe that their team will be put to such a severe test that they will be able to pick outflaws that have hitherto been hidden.

The regular practice games at Columbia were resumed yesterday, but the 'Varsity was so broken up that the makeshift team had its hards full to defeat the scrub Van Loevenberg. Wolff, Coffin and Captain Morley were the only men who played against Princeton to appear in the line-up. Slocovitch played with the scrubs yesteriary, and will lend his services in developing the team now that he cannot play himself. Quarter Back Sykes will not play any more this year on account of his law work. He only consented to play in the big games after much persuasion, and broke training veterday. A large c gar did it. The team, coaches and substitutes will leave to-day for Buffalo, where they will meet the University of Buffalo, where they will meet the University of Buffalo to-morrow.

IN THE FOOTBALL WORLD.

All of the 'Varsity players were back at work save Ellis, Sawin, Kendall, Hallowell and Campbell Hallowell is resting, Campbell nursing a bruised head, and the first three rapidly recovering from their injuries in the Pennsylvania game. Capt. Daly goes about on crutches, and will not enter the Brown game.

Easton, Nov. 8.—Admirers of the Lafavette football team were downcast to night when it was ascertained that an accident to Half Back Launt, which occurred this afterneon and was thought to be slight, is of a most serious nature and will probably throw him out of the game for the rest of the season. His jaw was broken by collision, and it will be necessary to train in another man for his place. Pressure is being brought to boar on Slatterly, who has quit football, to come to the rescue so that Lafayette may be able to put up a good game against Pennsylvania on Saturday. The eleven will go on the gridiron with most of the regular players in position, but it is doubtful whether Cure, Chalmers and Trout will be able to stand the contest for even the first half.
